

Developed in the mid-19th century by long range marksmen, the back position gave riflemen a very stable position from which to fire their match rifles at distances out to 1,000 yards.